Also It is good if you can help us by uploading a picture of the problem Thank you all A: The JMP Pro version is actually (in a roundabout way) a version of SAS software. The original JMP (as JMP Pro was known at that time) was SAS, and I think you're seeing the remnants of that. There are a few key differences: It supports different operating systems and hardware It runs SAS on the backend It has a programmatic API, which makes it much easier to create remote application There are many new features including big data analysis The JMP Pro version is definitely not free software, but if you want to get started on the SAS side of things there is a 30 day free trial, and then you can get a free version of JMP Pro. If you are just getting started there are many tutorials on the SAS website. Start with the Introduction to SAS and Data Step. Once you are familiar with the SAS software you can use the JMP API to make your own plugins. The present invention relates generally to video signal and video processing techniques and, more particularly, to a method and system for image compression. There has been much work done in the area of video signal processing and compression. Both the video signal processing and compression techniques have been applied to a variety of purposes such as video teleconferencing, video monitoring and storage applications. Generally speaking, these techniques have been limited to use in real time compression applications. Real-time compression is typically limited in bit rate and thus in data rate. For example, the average bit rate of a compressed video signal is in the range of about 60 to 150 megabits per second, which will generally yield a video signal with a visual quality that is perceptually more than acceptable for some purposes. However, this bit rate is well outside of the range of the typical home consumer network access device which is limited in bit rate in the range of about 5 to 10 megabits per second and more typically is limited to about 1 to 2 megabits per second. In addition, the rate has been further limited by the need to support packet loss and control, e.g., resynchronization, for packet switched networks. Another area of video signal processing and compression involves real-time encoding of the video signal followed by storage of the video signal in a memory. The encoded video signal is stored in the memory for a specified period of time 3da54e8ca3
