My visit was like a holiday that had no boundaries or borders. There were no family restrictions. My mother and I, uncle and aunt, nephew and his mother, also spent time with his brother and brother's friend. The friend had a collection of books. They were mainly books by Arthur C Clarke. I remember it for the cover, a glowing white face with intense, deep black eyes. The book was called The Deep Range. In my eight-year-old mind I knew that this book was important. After all, it was the only one on the shelf. But I didn't know its name. Later I learned of it from conversations with other kids. "A book about going very very far." "The furthest anyone has gone to." "There is not a single person living who has ever gone as far as the rocket Pluto fell." And I thought, "of course that would be interesting!" We could play a lot of cosmic games. What's the largest distance you've ever been? How high is the highest you've ever been? What do you get to eat for dinner when you're at the limits 6a5afdab4c
